BRADFORD: A CITY OF FILM

Bradford: A City of Film is all about experiencing film in new ways, sharing the joy of cinema, and making it accessible across our district. This map highlights your nearest community cinema, local screenings, big cinema events, and the places that tell Bradford's film story.

As the world's first UNESCO City of Film, we're proud of our film heritage – and excited for its future. This title belongs to everyone, inviting you to discover, share and shape Bradford's film story.

A SNAPSHOT OF BRADFORD'S CINEMA HISTORY

WE Berry Ltd, one of the most important producers of film posters, was based in Bradford from 1898 to 2004. The National Science and Media Museum (NSMM) (free entry) has a substantial collection of posters donated by the firm in its collection.

The first purpose-built cinema – the King's Hall – opened in 1911. See the locations of other historical cinemas in Bradford on the map, including Unit Four, Arcadian, Malboro, Sangeet and Scala.

Bradford became a hub for South Asian cinema in the 1960s and 1970s, with seven venues showing exclusively Indian films – ahead of its time in the UK.

One of the first cinema shows outside London took place in a music hall known as the People's Palace – the site where the National Science and Media Museum now stands – in 1896.

The peak of cinema attendance was during the Second World War, when there were 44 cinemas in the district.

The first IMAX cinema in Europe opened in Bradford in 1983 at the National Science and Media Museum.

A City of Film map

Bradford became the world's first UNESCO City of Film in 2009, bestowing international recognition on Bradford as a world centre for film. Being a part of the international UNESCO Creative Cities Network means that our city can:

- continue to develop film education opportunities across schools and communities in Bradford.
- develop further collaborations through the UNESCO Creative Cities Network to celebrate culture, creativity and life through the moving image.
- continue to support professional film and TV production in the region through the Bradford Film Office.

If you would like to find out more about Bradford's UNESCO City of Film status visit www.bradford-city-of-film.com

Bradford: A City of Film is a film exhibition programme across Bradford District for Bradford 2025. Delivered in partnership with National Science and Media Museum with the support of the BFL awarding National Lottery funding.

A big thank you to our funders, curators and partners for supporting the City of Film programme.
